Abstract

This study aims to experimentally verify the principle of constant velocity of light and Galilean relativity. Special relativity states that the velocity of light is constant to all observers, but there has been no study that had experimentally verified the principle of constant velocity of light as the velocity of the light source increases with respect to the observer. This paper aims to experimentally verify the principle of a constant velocity of light by using the velocity of the image data signal sent by Voyager 1 to Earth.

The experiment is performed by dividing the distance of the light path between Voyager 1 and Earth by the delay time for the signal from Voyager 1 to reach Earth. If the principle of the velocity of light is correct, the velocity of the signal will be the same as the velocity of light in the vacuum. But if Galilean relativity is correct, the velocity of the signal will be the velocity of light minus the velocity of Voyager 1.

Analyzing the velocity of the signal shows that the velocity of the signal does not match the velocity of light in the vacuum. Furthermore, the velocity of the signal decreases in inverse proportion to the increase in the velocity of Voyager 1, suggesting that the velocity of Voyager 1 affects the velocity of light.

This phenomenon can be an example of Galilean relativity being applied to the velocity of light.

Introduction

1. Purpose of the study

Albert Einstein's theory of special relativity is known as one of the most revolutionary theories in physics, along with quantum mechanics. The theory was first presented in 1905 in paper named "ON THE ELECTRODYNAMICS OF MOVING BODIES <sup>[1]</sup>", and the principle of the constancy of the velocity of light was introduced in "I. KINEMATICAL PART- §2. On the Relativity of Lengths and Times" of the same paper (Fig. 1). According to this theory, the velocity of light is constant no matter which system observer is looking at the light from, even when the observer and the light source are moving relative to each other. This seems to contradict Galilean relativity, where the velocity is determined relative to the motion of the observer and light source, but the principle of constant velocity of light, along with Galilean relativity, has become an important theory to explain mechanics and the universe up to date.

However, it has been nearly 120 years since the theory was published, but the principle of a constant velocity of light has never been verified experimentally, meaning that the velocity of light has never been measured as a function of the difference between the velocity of the source and the observer. For example, in the Michelson-Morley Interferometer experiment <sup>[2]</sup>, the source and the observer are on Earth, so there is no difference in the velocity of the source and the observer because they are traveling at the same velocity even as the Earth rotates and revolves. Because the source and observer are in the same inertial system with 0 relative velocities it is a logical leap to say that the velocity of light from the light source is constant no matter which inertial system the observer is observing the light from. Therefore, the Michelson-Morley Interferometer experiment cannot be perfect proof that the velocity of light is constant even if the source and observer are moving relatively.

In this paper, we will verify the principle of the constant velocity of light by performing a photometric experiment on a light source moving away from the observer. Since Voyager 1 is moving away from Earth, measuring the velocity of the radio signals sent from Voyager 1 to Earth will allow us to see whether the velocity of light changes as the source moves relative to the observer. If we could do an experiment precisely if we had the data of communication between Voyager 1 and Earth, but we couldn't have access to the communications data. So the next best thing was to use the image data of Jupiter sent from Voyager 1 to Earth. However, the image data of Voyager 1 does not show the location of the receiver that received the data and had various experimental errors and variables such as considering the time gain effect caused by the gravitational effect of general relativity.

However, it is believed that the purpose of the experiment can be achieved by analyzing the trend of the velocity of the signal, even not considering the errors of the time dilation effect caused by the gravitational force of general relativity and the distance change between Voyager 1 and receiver on Earth. Because the distance change between Voyager 1 and the receiver on Earth due to the position of the receiver always occurs at a constant period rate and time gain of the gravitational effect of general relativity can be predicted. Therefore, this study was conducted for the following two purposes.

Purposes 1. Determine the relative velocity of the light source and observer affects the velocity of light

Purposes 2. Verify that the velocity of light decreases proportionally as the source moves away faster from the observer

By confirming these two purposes, we hope to experimentally verify the principle of the constancy of the velocity of light and Galilean relativity.

1. The laws by which the states of physical systems undergo change are not affected, whether these changes of state be referred to the one or the other of two systems of co-ordinates in uniform translatory motion.

2. Any ray of light moves in the "stationary" system of co-ordinates with the determined velocity  $c$ , whether the ray be emitted by a stationary or by a moving body. Hence

1. Theoretical Background

When the Earth receives a signal from Voyager 1, Voyager 1 is the light source and the Earth is the observer. According to Galilean relativity, the velocity of a particle launched from an object is [the velocity of the object + the velocity of the particle seen from the object]. So, according to Galilean relativity, as Voyager 1 travels away from Earth, the velocity of the signal seen by an observer on Earth is [the velocity of light seen by the object - the velocity of Voyager 1].

However, the velocity of light in special relativity is always measured constant as 299792.458 km/s from everyone, regardless of the relative velocities of the observer and the light source and even when they are in different Inertial Systems. Therefore, according to the constant velocity of light principle, the velocity of light should be measured constantly, unaffected by the relative velocity of Voyager 1, even as Voyager 1 moves relative to the Earth.

In the case of a constant velocity of light, the velocity of the signal is always constant at  $c$ , even if the relative velocity of the light source increases, so subtracting  $c$  from results becomes 0, and in the case of Galilean relativity according to the law of velocity summation, the velocity of light from an object is [velocity of the object + velocity of light seen by the object]. If we state the velocity of Voyager 1 " $v$ ", the velocity of the signal will be  $c-v$ , as we subtract the velocity of light  $c$ , it will be  $-v$ , which is the negative velocity of Voyager 1.

Based on the theory above, we can make two hypotheses about whether the velocity of the light source affects the velocity of light or not.

Hypothesis 1. If the velocity of light is constant, the velocity of the signal -  $c = 0$

Hypothesis 2. If relativity is applied to the velocity of light, the velocity of the signal -  $c = -v$

By comparing the two hypotheses with results we can see which theory fits the result.

2. Definition of velocity

Velocity is the distance traveled per time. In general, if an object traveled a distance of " $s$ " in time " $t$ " velocity " $v$ " can be expressed as " $v=s/t$ ". This can be expressed as " $v=ds/dt$ ", which is the amount of change in distance divided by the amount of change in time.

$$\text{velocity} = \frac{\text{light path}}{\text{time interval}}$$

The velocity of the signal, or so-called the velocity of light, can be found by dividing the light path by the time it took for the signal to arrive. The light path is the distance traveled by the light, so it is the distance from the place where Voyager 1 sends the signal and the place where Earth receives the signal.

3. Data collection

According to the database provided by the NASA PDS (Planetary data system) image atlas, there are approximately 140,000 image data of Voyager 1. In order to eliminate variables as much as possible other than the variables we want to observe, we selected image data before March 3, 1979, which is data before Voyager 1 was in Jupiter's gravitational effect, and with an exposure time of 0.96 seconds.

4. NASA WGC

NSAS WGC (WebGeocalc) is software that calculates the coordinates, distance, velocity, angle, etc. of each planet or satellite for the time entered. You may think that the distance between Voyager 1 and the Earth in WGC is the light path, but it is not the light path traveled by the signal, but the distance between Voyager 1 and the Earth for the entered time. Since the light path is the distance the signal traveled. It is the distance from Voyager 1 when it sent the signal to Earth when it received the signal. So we used the coordinates of Voyager 1 when it sent the signal, and the coordinates of Earth when it received the signal relative to the Sun, to calculate the light path and velocity.

Table 2) WGC data <Refer to Appendix>

However, as mentioned earlier in the introduction, Voyager 1 and Earth are using the Deep Space Network (DSN) to communicate, so there are three receivers on the ground (California, Madrid, and Canberra). However, the image data from Voyager 1 does not indicate which DSN receiver it received the image data from, so the Earth's coordinates used in the research are the center of Earth. The problem with using geocentric coordinates is that they do not reflect the effect of the Earth's rotation. In reality, the distance between Voyager 1 and the DSN receivers should be moving closer and further apart as the angle changes over time, but since the location of the DSN receivers cannot be specified, it was not possible to include the effect of rotation.

5. Predicted values for each theory

Hypothesis 1. If the velocity of light is constant, the velocity of the signal -  $c = 0$

Hypothesis 2. If relativity is applied to the velocity of light, the velocity of the signal -  $c = -v$

6. Velocity of the signal

Now let's generate the data we need to test our hypothesis. The delay time (DT) is the time it took Earth to receive the signal from Voyager 1, as shown below.

$$DT = \text{Earth received time} - \text{Image time}$$

The velocity of the signal can be found by dividing the light path by DT. The velocity of the signal change Delta required for the hypothesis can be generated by subtracting "c" from the velocity of the signal generated above.

Experimental result analyzation

1. Analysis of the velocity of Voyager 1 and Delta over time

A scatter plot of the signal's velocity change, Delta, against time looks like Plot 2). We can see that when the velocity of Voyager 1 is upward with respect to time, the plot of Delta is downward with respect to time, meaning that as Voyager 1's velocity increases, Delta decreases. This suggests that the trend of Delta follows Hypothesis 2.

2. Analysis of Pearson correlation coefficient and P-value test

Pearson correlation coefficient is an analysis technique in statistics to analyze how two groups are related. The sign of the correlation coefficient indicates whether relationships between the two groups are directly proportional or inversely proportional. A positive sign indicates a direct proportional relationship, while a negative sign indicates an inverse relationship. The absolute value of the correlation coefficient is a number from 0 to 1 that represents the relationship amount between the two groups. A correlation coefficient of 0 indicates independence, 0.1 to less than 0.3 indicates a weak correlation, 0.3 to less than 0.7 indicates a strong correlation and 0.7 or more but less than 1.0 indicates a strong correlation. The P-value test expresses the degree to which the observed data is compatible with the null hypothesis, expressed as a number between 0 and 1. If the P-value is 0 to 0.005, the null hypothesis is rejected and the test is said to be significant. In this paper, the null hypothesis of the P-value test is that the correlation coefficient between two groups is rejected.

Let's analyze the correlation coefficient and P-value test to see how the velocity of Voyager 1 and Delta are related and how much they are related. Before analyzing the correlation coefficient of the two groups, we need to draw a scatter plot between the two groups to check for outliers and to check the distribution of the two groups. Plot 3) shows a scatter plot of the velocity change Delta of the signal against the velocity of Voyager 1.

Plot3) Scatter plot of Delta against Voyager 1 velocity

If you look at the scatter plot of Delta against Voyager 1's velocity, you can see that the scattered dots of Delta are downward against Voyager 1's velocity. This tells us that Delta is inversely proportional to Voyager 1's velocity, so the correlation coefficient can be expected to be negative. However, because the distribution of Delta over the trend line of Delta is wide, we can expect the correlation coefficient to be small.

Table 5) Table of Pearson correlation coefficient <Refer to Appendix>

	Velocity of Voyager 1	Delta
Velocity of Voyager 1	1	-0.387433954
Delta	-0.387433954	1

The correlation coefficient is similar to what we predicted in Plot 3), with a correlation coefficient of -0.38743 between Voyager 1 velocity and Delta. A negative correlation coefficient tells us that the two groups are inversely related, and the absolute value of -0.38743 which is 0.38743 indicates a statistically significant correlation.

Table 6) Regression analysis <Refer to Appendix>

Regression analysis
Multistate Correlation Coefficient	0.387433954
P-value	1.4057E-118

In Regression analysis, we can say that the correlation coefficient between the two variables is significant because the P-value between Delta and Voyager 1 velocity is  $1.4 \times 10^{-11}$ , which is close to 0 and less than 0.005, so we can reject the null hypothesis.

To summarize, the correlation coefficient is -0.387434, which means that Delta and the Voyager 1 velocity are inversely related to each other, and the P-value is  $1.4 \times 10^{-118}$ , which means that the correlation between the two groups is significant.

Discussion

The experimental results in Plot 2) and Plot 3) confirm Hypothesis 2 predicted by Galilean relativity, rather than Hypothesis 1 predicted by the constant velocity of light. However, we can also see that the distribution of Delta in Plot 2) and Plot 3) is broadly distributed over Hypothesis 2 and does not completely agree with Hypothesis 2. Let's discuss what variables might be responsible for the wide distribution of Delta and the phenomenon that Delta does not fully agree with Hypothesis 2.

As mentioned earlier in the introduction, the Voyager 1 image data used in this research was not observed for this research, so it can be expected that there are many variables concluding the time gain due to the gravitational effect.

For the first variable, as mentioned in the introduction of this paper and in main subject section 4, the image data does not indicate which station the image was received from, so the exact distance between Voyager 1 and the station is unknown. The distance between Voyager 1 and the station is closer than the distance between Voyager 1 and the center of the Earth, and this distance decreases with the angle between the station, the center of the Earth, and Voyager 1. If the location of the station could be determined, the distance from the station to Voyager 1 would be less than the distance from the Earth's center to Voyager 1, resulting in an overall smaller Delta.

The second variable is caused by the Earth's gravity, which makes the Earth's clock slower than Voyager 1's clock. According to general relativity, time runs slower where gravity is relatively strong than where gravity is relatively weak. This effect was demonstrated in the Hafele-Keating relativity time gain experiment (Hafele, J. C., & Keating, R. E. (1972). Around-the-world atomic clocks: Observed relativistic time gains. Science, 177(4044), 168-170.)<sup>[3]</sup>. Due to this effect, the clock on Voyager 1 will be running faster than the clock on the ground under Earth's gravity. Therefore, Voyager 1's time received by the station on Earth will be greater than the time that has actually passed based on Earth time. Therefore, the time  $DT$  that the signal took to reach Earth will be less than the value of  $DT$  previously obtained, because Voyager 1's clock is faster than Earth's clock. Also, since the time gain phenomenon can be accumulated or superimposed, the time  $DT$  that the signal took to reach the Earth will decrease further as time passes. As a result, the slope of Delta is expected to decrease if we consider the time gain effect caused by gravity in general relativity. While there are likely many other variables, the fact that the value of Delta is closer to Hypothesis 2 is considered an acceptable result to fulfill the purpose of the experiment.

Conclusion

This study sought to empirically verify a conflict between the constant velocity of light and the principle of Galilean relativity. To do so, we used the velocity of light from the Voyager 1 as it traveled away from Earth, to measure the velocity of light from a source moving away from the observer. Due to two variables that were not present in the Voyager 1 image data mentioned in the Introduction and Discussion, we were unable to confirm the results that perfectly agree with hypothesis 2 set in this research. Nevertheless, we were able to confirm the two study purposes 1 and 2. Through the correlation coefficient analysis and P-value test, we confirmed that the velocity of the light source affects the velocity of light, and through the experimental result analysis 1 and 2, we confirmed that the velocity of light decreases when the velocity of the light source increases than before the velocity of the light source increases. This confirms that the velocity of light is more consistent with Galilean relativity than the principle of the constant velocity of light when the light source moves relatively. Furthermore, even after considering various errors and variables, the inverse relationship between the velocity of the signal and the velocity of Voyager 1 is strong evidence that Galilean relativity applies to the velocity of light.
